Enjoying the View Inside and Out

This house was for a family that loves the outdoors and being active. A portion of the interior of the original home was gutted and totally redone, and a two-car garage and home gym were added. The use of cross beams as a structural and design element in the kitchen was carried over into the new annex as a unifying theme. Once the main house was finished, the pool house was renovated, and trellises and bocce court added.

“I appreciated that SWS was open to my ideas and my wanting to be involved. They improved our original design by recommending floor-to-ceiling windows to maximize views of the woods and a brook. When it came time to do additional work, we never considered using another builder.”

SWS Builders' Inside View

“We worked intensively with the client who didn't want the usual materials. For her pool decking, she wanted a unique look and a material that would stay cool to the touch in the summer heat. None of the locally available samples met the criteria. During a trip to Mexico, we visited a quarry that yielded a stone that was ideal.

Under our supervision, the stone slabs were selected, cut to pattern, shipped and installed.”
