From Carriage House to Kitchen

Why waste a gorgeous view on cars, bikes, and hardware? Working with a top-tier kitchen design firm, SWS Builders turned a carriage house into an inviting kitchen with adjacent family room that makes the most of its Long Island Sound views. Beams and columns, essential to structural support and efficient traffic flow, were disguised as design elements through detailed woodwork. Creative use of space made it possible to accommodate high-end appliances and several workstations.

SWS Builders’ Inside View

“The owners wanted to change the kitchen, and create a pantry, mudroom and laundry, but maintain an open flow. It was also important that floor-to-ceiling views of the water not be compromised. This resulted in a number of structural issues. We worked very closely with the kitchen designer and the client, and met on a weekly basis. At times, we reworked entire sections to make sure everything fit together smoothly without compromising function.”
